ALAMO HEIGHTS CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Historian to give chamber 'sage advice' on commerce

Living historian and local attorney Tom Jackson plans to tell the Alamo Heights Chamber of Commerce about the Ten Commandments of Texas Business when he addresses the group at its August luncheon.

Jackson, who dresses in period attire for his living history presentations, said he'll come dressed as an Old West cowboy to offer chamber members "sage advice" about their business practices.

"It's simple, common-sense, every-day things," he said, spiced up with a retrospective of Texas history.

If people think they have problems today, he explained, they should be reminded of the hardships endured — and serious challenges overcome — by their forebears who fought in the Texas Revolution or raised and drove cattle for a living.

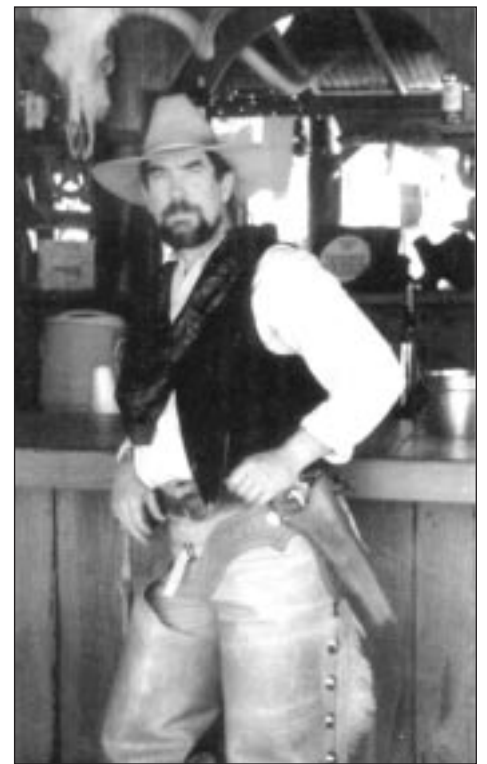

The luncheon is at Water Street Oyster Bar on Wednesday, August 4. Networking begins at 11:30 a.m. with the luncheon and Jackson's address to follow at noon.

Jackson gives his educational and entertaining living history presentations to trade groups, conventions and school children around San Antonio and the state.

A sixth-generation Texan, Jackson counts among his ancestors a fighter in the Storming of Bejar battle of the Texas Revolution and cattle ranchers/trail drivers based in the Lytle area.

He graduated from Alamo Heights High School in 1971 and followed the footsteps of relatives into the construction field.

He went to law school in 1981 and currently practices general civil law with a focus on construction matters.

One tax delayed, another repealed

By Ruth Chislett, CPA

The State Comptroller's Office has announced it is delaying implementation of legislation meant to require retailers to collect and remit local use taxes to jurisdictions regardless whether they operated in those jurisdictions. Scheduled to take effect July 1, the law was intended to require a retailer who provides taxable services to collect tax based on the location where the service is performed or otherwise delivered to the purchaser.

Because of concerns expressed by several members of the Texas Legislature, as well as many business owners in Texas, implementation of the law is being delayed indefinitely.

For businesses in the City of San Antonio, the additional city sales and use tax for Sports and Community Venues is repealed effective July 1, 2004. This means that the total sales tax rate for businesses located within San Antonio City limits will be 7.75% effective July 1, 2004. This repeal does not affect sales tax rates for businesses within the cities of Alamo Heights, Olmos Park, or Terrell Hills.
